My intent for this image is to impact passersby and engage them for a moment of solitude, clarity, or stillness, as it has for me over the years when noticing its beauty outside an airplane window. It's a reminder to me that nature seeks each one of us, but not all realize it.
– Johnny Robles

Johnny Robles is a multi-disciplinary artist working at the intersection of art, technology, and nature. Studies in color theory, geometry, and science, combined with his natural and spiritual world interests, are central to his work.

The artwork's title, Gloria Bow, is derived from a glory rainbow, a halo of interlocking colors made up of tiny droplets of water reflecting sunlight scattered back towards the viewer. This phenomenon in nature can be experienced from tall buildings, a mountain top, or an airplane. Over the years, the artist's experiences of observing glories have marveled and served him as reminders that nature seeks each of us.

Robles's practice varies in material and process, including drawing, painting, sculpture, design, and installation. His work has been integrated with architecture in recent years, uncovering new meaning through shifts in perception, scale, and imagery. For each project, various techniques are employed that are synchronized with the viewer's attention to movement and point of view in relation to the work.

The artist aims to explore psychological affects with color, materials, and techniques that embody emotive and perceptual associations, such as play, interaction, elation and control.
